Young, Black, and Safe

A National Community Safety and Advocacy Initiative of the Black Youth Empowerment Network

Building safer conditions for Black youth through education, advocacy, community engagement, and strategic partnership.

[Partner With Us] [Join the Initiative]

Overview

Young, Black, and Safe is the Black Youth Empowerment Network's national community safety and advocacy initiative.

The initiative unites Black youth, BYEN chapters, community organizations, public institutions, and advocates around a shared goal: expanding access to resources, strengthening awareness, and advancing solutions that protect the safety and well-being of Black young people.

Through national campaigns, local programming, public advocacy, community conversations, and strategic partnerships, Young, Black, and Safe keeps the safety of Black youth visible, urgent, and central to the decisions that shape their communities.

The initiative draws on BYEN's national network of more than 700 members and multiple collegiate chapters across the Southeast and East Coast.

How can young people fully learn, lead, and pursue opportunity if they are not safe?

Why This Work Matters

Gun violence remains one of the leading causes of death among Black youth. Its impact reaches far beyond the immediate loss of life, shaping how young people experience their schools, neighborhoods, relationships, and futures.

Young, Black, and Safe responds to the urgent need for gun violence prevention while recognizing that safety extends well beyond protection from physical harm. For Black youth, safety also means access to mental health support, accurate legal information, trusted community resources, responsive institutions, and a genuine voice in the decisions that affect their lives.

Our work is organized around three areas:

Physical Safety Advancing education, prevention strategies, partnerships, and youth-led action in response to gun violence and other threats to the physical safety of Black youth.

Mental Well-Being Connecting young people with information, professionals, support systems, and community spaces that recognize the effects of violence, grief, discrimination, and trauma.

Legal Awareness Equipping Black youth with accessible information to understand their rights, navigate public systems, and advocate for fair treatment in their schools, campuses, and communities.

Our Track Record

BYEN's commitment to community safety is established and ongoing.

200+ Black Youth Engaged BYEN has hosted two in-person gun violence convenings, bringing together more than 200 young people, community members, advocates, and organizational leaders. Both convenings received local news coverage and opened new pathways for education, dialogue, and collective action.

Established Partnerships BYEN has built formal partnerships with government officials and national and local organizations, including the Everytown Community Safety Fund, Students Demand Action, and the Atlanta Mayor's Office of Violence Reduction.

Community Violence Intervention Fellowship In Fall 2026, BYEN will launch a competitive Community Violence Intervention Fellowship in partnership with the Everytown Community Safety Fund. The fellowship will select 15 emerging leaders to deepen their knowledge of community violence intervention and prepare them to advance safety within their communities.

What We Do

Young, Black, and Safe delivers programming that gives Black youth practical knowledge, trusted resources, and real opportunities to shape community safety efforts.

Workshops and Trainings Educational sessions on gun violence prevention, personal safety, mental health awareness, legal rights, and community advocacy, designed so participants leave with information they can understand, apply, and share within their own networks.

Public Advocacy We engage young people in policy conversations, public education campaigns, and community initiatives addressing gun violence prevention and the broader safety and well-being of Black youth, ensuring they are not only represented in these conversations but prepared to shape the solutions.

Resource Development and Distribution We create and distribute accessible materials that connect young people and families with information on legal rights, mental health services, safety resources, and community-based support systems.

Community Convenings We host forums, workshops, listening sessions, and public events that bring together young people, community leaders, professionals, and institutions, strengthening relationships and creating pathways for coordinated action.

Our Approach

Young, Black, and Safe is grounded in the belief that Black youth must be active participants in shaping the systems, policies, and programs meant to protect them.

The initiative pairs national visibility with local engagement. BYEN provides the infrastructure, partnerships, and shared direction, while chapters and community partners adapt programming to the needs of the young people and communities they serve. This structure allows Young, Black, and Safe to stay nationally aligned while remaining responsive to local conditions.

Our work is designed to:

- Increase access to practical safety information and resources
- Strengthen youth knowledge of legal rights and public systems
- Expand youth participation in community safety and policy discussions
- Support prevention, healing, and community-based intervention
- Build stronger relationships between young people and trusted institutions
- Position Black youth as informed contributors to long-term solutions

Partnership Opportunities

Young, Black, and Safe invites nonprofit organizations, corporations, foundations, educational institutions, government agencies, healthcare providers, legal professionals, and community leaders to support the initiative.

Organizations may participate as an Institutional Partner or an Endorsing Organization.

Institutional Partners - Institutional Partners provide substantial, ongoing support to Young, Black, and Safe, which may include financial investment, in-kind services, subject-matter expertise, professional training, research or data support, and access to facilities, speakers, or community resources. Institutional Partners are formally recognized across initiative programming and materials as core contributors to the sustainability and growth of Young, Black, and Safe.

[Become an Institutional Partner]

Endorsing Organizations - Endorsing Organizations provide public support for Young, Black, and Safe and help extend awareness of the initiative within their networks. Endorsement does not require a financial contribution; it reflects an organization's public commitment to the safety and well-being of Black youth.

[Endorse the Initiative]

Join the Initiative

Young, Black, and Safe is building a national network of young people, institutions, and community partners committed to improving the conditions in which Black youth live, learn, and lead.

Young people can take part through educational programming, community conversations, advocacy campaigns, local activations, and leadership opportunities offered through BYEN and its partners. Organizations can contribute funding, expertise, platforms, resources, and institutional access.

Together, we can move beyond awareness and build the partnerships, programs, and systems required to advance safer futures for Black youth.

Here's the people quotes,

Olivia: Empowering black youth means to me - giving them the support and tools needed to succeed. Giving them the lessons and answers earlier so they are prepared to enter the world unapologetically. Building them up so that they are the representation and resource that this community needs.

Jordan: Empowering Black youth means equipping them with the knowledge, resources, and platforms to advocate for themselves and shape the future they want to see. It means recognizing that talent and ambition exist in every community, but opportunity is not always distributed equally. True empowerment is about removing barriers, expanding access, and ensuring Black youth are not only prepared to enter spaces of leadership but are also confident enough to redefine those spaces.

Alex: It means giving space for others to learn for themselves. A lot of the time we listen to other generations on what we should do, like they have all the answers. However providing the information in which black youth can use at the disposal to create their own story within whatever career they choose, allows them to have total control and confidence in themselves because they're the ones actively bringing their dreams to life

Building America's Network of Young Black Leaders

The Black Youth Empowerment Network brings together some of the nation's most promising, driven, and community-minded young Black leaders.

BYEN members are not defined only by titles, résumés, or past accomplishments. They are defined by their ambition, character, willingness to grow, and commitment to creating meaningful change.

Our members are students, organizers, advocates, entrepreneurs, creatives, professionals, and emerging leaders who believe their success should strengthen the communities around them.

[Become a Member]

One Network. Two Membership Types.

Every BYEN member belongs to one national network and gains access to a broader community of young Black leaders, opportunities, resources, relationships, and leadership experiences.

Members engage with BYEN through one of two membership types:

At-Large Members

At-Large Membership is designed for young Black leaders who want to participate in BYEN's national network but do not currently attend a school or live in a community with an established BYEN chapter.

At-Large Members can engage in national programming, virtual experiences, leadership development, special initiatives, member opportunities, and connections with leaders from across the country.

Chapter Members

Chapter Members belong to an officially recognized BYEN chapter on their college campus or within their local community.

Chapter Members receive access to the broader national network while also participating in local meetings, programs, service projects, social experiences, and leadership opportunities led through their chapter.

Regardless of membership type, every member is part of the same BYEN community.

One mission. One network. Multiple ways to engage.

The BYEN Member

BYEN members represent the next generation of Black leadership.

They are ambitious enough to imagine something better, disciplined enough to develop themselves, and courageous enough to take action.

Our members are committed to:

- Growing personally and professionally
- Building meaningful relationships with other young Black leaders
- Creating solutions to challenges facing their communities
- Using their talents, knowledge, and influence to make an impact
- Supporting the success and development of others
- Leading with integrity, excellence, and purpose

BYEN is not simply a network people join. It is a community members help build.

Why Join BYEN?

Membership connects young Black leaders to the people, experiences, and opportunities that can help them expand what they believe is possible.

BYEN members may receive access to:

- Leadership development programs and workshops
- Internships, scholarships, fellowships, and career opportunities
- Mentorship and exposure to established professionals

- National conferences, convenings, and special experiences
- Community service and civic engagement initiatives
- National and chapter leadership opportunities
- A growing network of ambitious young Black leaders
- Platforms to share their ideas, work, and perspectives
- Collaborative opportunities with nonprofit, corporate, educational, and community partners

Opportunities may vary based on availability, eligibility, location, and program requirements.

What Makes BYEN Different?

BYEN is built by young Black leaders, for young Black leaders.

We understand that talent is everywhere, but access, support, exposure, and opportunity are not always distributed equally.

BYEN exists to help close that gap by creating a national community where ambitious young people can find support, strengthen their leadership, build authentic relationships, and gain access to experiences that move them forward.

Our goal is not only to identify emerging leaders.

Our goal is to invest in them, connect them, and help position them to transform their campuses, careers, communities, and the country.

Who Belongs in BYEN?

BYEN is for young Black leaders who are serious about their development and committed to something larger than themselves.

You do not need to have everything figured out. You do not need the perfect résumé or an impressive title.

You should be ready to learn, contribute, collaborate, and grow.

Strong members demonstrate:

- Ambition and a desire to improve
- Commitment to the Black community
- Interest in leadership and service
- Curiosity and openness to new perspectives
- Accountability and professionalism
- A willingness to contribute to the network
- A genuine desire to create positive change

Membership is selective because the strength of BYEN depends on the quality, commitment, and character of the people within it.

The Membership Experience

BYEN creates opportunities for members to grow across three core areas:

Member Development

Strengthening the personal, professional, and leadership capacity of every member.

Civic Engagement

Connecting members to the issues affecting their communities and creating opportunities to participate in advocacy, public service, civic action, and community decision-making.

Community Empowerment

Equipping members to turn their ideas, talents, and leadership into meaningful local and national impact.

More Than a Network

BYEN is a community of young Black leaders who challenge, support, encourage, and open doors for one another.

Members do more than receive opportunities. They share resources, build relationships, develop ideas, lead initiatives, and contribute to the continued growth of the network.

Whether participating as an At-Large Member or through a BYEN chapter, every member has a role in shaping what BYEN becomes.

Ready to Join?

BYEN is building a powerful national community of young Black leaders who are prepared to grow, lead, and create change.

The next generation of leadership is already here.

We are bringing it together.

Bring BYEN to Your Campus

Build What Your Campus Is Missing

Some students join organizations. Others build the organizations their campuses need.

Creating BYEN chapters at colleges and universities across the country is an extension of our commitment to building America's network of young Black leaders.

Starting a BYEN chapter gives students the opportunity to create a space where young Black leaders can connect, collaborate, serve, and shape the culture of their campus. It is a chance to build a strong student community, create meaningful experiences, and establish an organization that continues long after you graduate.

[Express Interest in Starting a Chapter]

More Than Another Campus Organization

A BYEN chapter should become a trusted space for Black leadership, collaboration, service, and action.

Each chapter has the opportunity to understand what its campus needs, bring students together around a shared vision, and create experiences that strengthen both the campus and surrounding community.

Every chapter develops its own identity while remaining connected to one national network.

What Could BYEN Become on Your Campus?

A BYEN chapter could become:

- A gathering place for ambitious and community-minded students
- A platform for students to create programs around issues they care about
- A bridge between Black students, alumni, professionals, and community partners
- A source of leadership and collaboration across campus
- A space where students turn conversations into action
- An organization known for service, excellence, and meaningful impact
- A lasting institution that future students can continue to grow

Every campus is different. Strong chapters understand their environment and build with intention.

Founding a Chapter Means Building a Legacy

Founding a BYEN chapter gives students the opportunity to shape an organization from its beginning.

Founding leaders help establish:

- The chapter's culture and identity
- Its reputation across campus
- The programs and traditions it becomes known for
- The relationships it develops
- The expectations future leaders will inherit
- The impact it leaves behind

This work requires more than a good idea. It takes consistency, collaboration, responsibility, and a willingness to turn a vision into something others believe in.

Who Should Consider Starting a Chapter?

BYEN is looking for students who are prepared to take ownership of building something meaningful.

Prospective chapter founders should be ready to:

- Bring together a committed group of students
- Take initiative and follow through on ideas
- Build relationships across their campus
- Represent BYEN with maturity and professionalism
- Work collaboratively with students from different backgrounds and experiences
- Develop future leaders who can continue the chapter's work
- Build for long-term impact rather than short-term recognition

You do not need to be the most well-known student on campus.

You should be someone who can earn trust, bring people together, and help build something greater than yourself.

Is Your Campus Ready?

A strong chapter begins with more than one interested student. It begins with a shared vision, a committed founding group, and a clear understanding of why BYEN belongs on your campus.

BYEN considers new chapter opportunities based on student interest, campus readiness, organizational capacity, and alignment with the national network.

Submitting an interest form allows you to introduce your campus, your prospective founding team, and your vision for a potential BYEN chapter.

Now for the chapter tab

For the Our Chapters page, I want an interactive map of the United States at the top with dots showing the locations of BYEN's active chapters.

When someone clicks or taps a dot, a small preview should appear showing the chapter name, college or university, city and state, and a button to learn more. The button can scroll down to that chapter's card on the same page.

Below the map, I want a section titled Explore Our Chapters with a card for each chapter. Please keep the cards simple and include only:

- Official chapter name
- College or university
- City and state
- Year established
- Founded by
- A short quote representing the chapter

The page should feel like a clean national chapter directory and be easy to update as BYEN adds new chapters.
